
Spinoza's Tractatus Theologico Politicus

Fall 2018, University of Haifa,

Instructor: Dr. Daniel Schneider

Course Summary:

Spinoza's Theological Political Treatise (TTP) was described by an early critic as "a book forged in hell by an apostate Jew working together with the Devil." It is today widely regarded "one of the most important books of Western thought ever written." In this course we closely examine the arguments contained in Spinoza's TTP concerning the meaning and history Scripture, the relationship between reason, religion, and faith, and the origin and purpose of the political state—seeking to understand how this book helped give rise to "the secular age." The University of Haifa is

Method:

Our goal in this course is to engage philosophically with the ideas and arguments contained within Spinoza's TTP.

Philosophical engagement involves both a private component and a social component. The private component consists of the careful reading of texts, rumination upon ideas and argumentation, as well as an on going struggle to articulate the results of these efforts in a clear and accessible manner. The social component is something of a test of this struggle: It is in discussion—both spoken and written—that we come to discover the limits of our understanding and where our thoughts are most confused.

The structure and the assignments of this course are aimed at facilitating philosophical engagement.

Course Structure:

Class will consisted of structured discussion. Sometimes discussion will be instructor lead, sometimes it will be student led. For the sake of class discussion, Students are expected to not only have read the texts assigned for the week, but also to have thought carefully about them.

Everyone is expected to come to class with questions about the material already prepared. While no one is expected to possess a complete grasp of all the content of the text, students should come to
